Do not yield to the pressure and power of Dominion. The pipeline could be routed without involving these landowners and their easements but Dominion has chosen to go through some of the poorest but also the most pristine counties in the state of Virginia. Maybe you should suggest that Dominion look at another route that goes through the Hayfields property they purchased so the Dominion fat cats, who will use it for a retreat, can be treated to the 'environmentally friendly' practices they will use to put in the pipeline. They can route it within view of the house on that property, clear mountain top ridges within view of the house and enjoy the permanently scarred landscape for their corporate retreats.

VOF needs to also recognize the EIS issued by FERC was premature. It is missing pertinent information, misconstrues information, and VOF must acknowledge DEQ, Army Corp of Engineers and other parties responsible for our water conservation and safety have not done their due diligence. If VOF allows Dominion to build the pipeline on these properties under your protection, you might as well pack up and close down because there will not be a sole out there who will trust doing business with you.

Respectfully submitted,
